Support Compassionate Care Today

Jackie never thought that it could happen to their family. Her son, Owen, was found unconscious in a parked car—a victim of the opioid addiction crisis. She felt the hospital staff was judging her and losing hope in him. So she was amazed when his nurses took a different approach this time. They worked closely with Jackie and the rest of the family to learn how to best support Owen. These nurses had just attended a Schwartz Rounds™ program on caring for patients with substance use disorders. They learned how to leave judgment at the door and bring compassion to the bedside.

You can help ensure that caregivers nationwide, like your doctor and his or her whole team, will gain the skills needed to deliver compassionate care.
